
New executive search firm opens doors in Montreal

February 8, 2010, Montreal, QC – Two experienced and successful professionals in the executive search industry have joined forces to form their own firm. Patrice Borreman and Dominique Décarie are pleased to announce the creation of Décarie Borreman which opens for business in Montreal on February 8, 2010.

Located downtown in the IBM-Marathon building, 1250 René-Lévesque Boulevard, Décarie Borreman will specialize in executive search services. The partners first met while working at Korn/Ferry International after having built their careers over more than 25 years collectively in the industry.

“This is the natural next step for us,” said Décarie. “The field of executive search is currently going through significant changes, and Patrice and I both saw the best way to serve our clients was to form our own firm and offer adapted personalized executive search services.”

Décarie Borreman is dedicated to help its clients address what some are calling a “leadership crunch,” that is, the growing competition for exceptional executives amid a reduced flow of new and existing talent. The hiring of senior managers and board members has a great impact on the direction and performance of any business. In these economic times, this impact is even more significant.

“Effective recruiting is key to achieving business success,” noted Borreman. “It has been demonstrated that companies with better recruiting practices financially outperform the competition,” adding that “executive search consultants help ensure success because they often are the ones best suited to find new talent.”

The firm of Décarie Borreman is positioned to leverage its expertise, focusing resources uniquely on executive search, adding value to their clients.

Décarie Borreman is a Montreal-based firm that specializes in providing executive talent recruitment in an ever-changing economic environment.
